درباره هنرمند

روشن نوروژی | متولد تبریز

عکاس و روزنامه‌نگار ایرانی است که بخش مهمی از فعالیت حرفه‌ای خود را به عکاسی مستند و روایت تصویری از جامعه معاصر اختصاص داده است. نگاه او در عکاسی، بیش از ثبت صرف رویدادها، بر مشاهده و روایت جنبه‌های کمتر دیده‌شده زندگی روزمره استوار است. نوروژی از اعضای گروه «پودیوم» بوده؛ گروهی که با تمرکز بر عکاسی مستند ورزشی، تلاش کرده است از فضای متعارف و هیجانی رویدادهای ورزشی فاصله گرفته و به روایت انسانی و اجتماعی آن‌ها نزدیک شود. او همچنین از بنیان‌گذاران «جایزه عکاسی مستقل شید» و از فعالان حوزه معرفی و گسترش عکاسی معاصر ایران است.

Spring of 1988: new college

Students pouring the school's coffee

At that time, there was still no access to bricks, cement, or even to the slugs of Amberg. All buildings were constructed from straw, clay, and wood. When it rained, the roofs would leak into the rooms for several hours each after the rain stopped. In Amberg-populated villages, residents would secure the roofs with straw rollers after light rains. However, in small villages, the locals used wooden logs to pound the rooftops after rainfall, compacting the straw to prevent leaks.

Early summer, I would take my sisters and three children on trips to the villages, where I served (I was not married at that time), after a week or two of exploring, when it was time for them to return to Talysh, they would often find a crowd of villagers gathered in front of my house to say their good-byes. The women, bringing gifts like butter, cheese, olives, and hard-boiled meat soups as souvenirs for my sisters.

The old woman, one of the poorest in the ghetto, then shows that you are in her reach: her old photo, "Gloria Basso" was a lively and independent woman who had spent her life in culture, singing, and writing. She was married for just three months when her husband, a member of the Argentine Democratic Party, sought refuge in the Soviet Union and never returned. In Gloria Basso's life the world were two continents, and she provided for herself by selling her eggs. During that time, captured moments of her life in both poems and prose in my books.
